BREYFOGLE
Thank you. Those two words are simple yet powerful. They are the tools that help us grow and sustain relationships. They are ways of expressing our personal gratitude for the kindness and donations we have been blessed in receiving.
We don't feel saying thank you will ever be enough to show how grateful we are to everyone who has supported our family. The benefit that was held for our family, for our daughters, is one that would not have been possible without the generous donations from family, friends, acquaintances and businesses near and far to Lake City.
Please accept our sincere gratitude for your support. We appreciate it more than we can ever express.

EXTENSION INFORMATION

WHAT DRIVES DAN LARKIN TO SAVE OUR LAKES, RIVERS AND STREAMS
Dan Larkin
Dept. of Fisheries, Wildlife and Conservation Biology
U of M Extension Service
Nothing says “Minnesota” like water—we have the license plates to prove it—so the threat of invasive species to our precious lakes, rivers, and streams grabs our attention like stepping on a zebra mussel.

Daniel Larkin works to protect and restore the health of our waterways. He and his colleagues with U of M Extension and the Minnesota Aquatic Invasive Species Research Center are conducting applied research on invasive plant management and ecological restoration. “We are taking a multi-pronged approach to understand what’s driving the spread of invasive species and identify opportunities to limit and control those species and turn back damage that has been done,” says Larkin.

He focuses on three main aspects: assessing risk to better predict and prevent new invasions, testing strategies to control invasions that have occurred, and developing approaches to support the recovery of waters that have been degraded.

“Minnesota’s lakes, wetlands, and other aquatic habitats are incredible ecological, recreational, and economic resources. Developing sound science that can help protect our waters from harmful invasive plant species is important for Minnesota’s future.”

Research and Extension efforts are important pieces of the puzzle, Larkin says, and solutions will come through sustained partnerships among the many stakeholders committed to protecting our state from aquatic invasive species.

“We want to create healthy lakes that support biodiversity, recreation, tourism, and the other goods and services that we value so highly,” he adds. “Lakes are such an important part of the economy and lifestyle of the state that it is hard to imagine Minnesotans who are not affected in some way by their condition.”

People can learn more about aquatic invasive species research at <http://www.maisrc.umn.edu/news-and-events-new/press-releases/> and <http://www.maisrc.umn.edu/>.
