PRESERVING SAFE SALSA
By Carol Ann Burtneis
Food Science Educator
U of M Extension Service

Americans love salsa! Canning salsa is a fun, easy way to preserve tomatoes for year-round enjoyment.

Tomato-based salsa recipes are usually a mixture of tomatoes, onions, peppers and spices. When canning salsa, use only high-quality tomatoes. Canning is not a way to use overripe or damaged tomatoes, or tomatoes from dead or frost-killed vines because these may cause the product to spoil and be unsafe to eat.

The type of tomato you use in your salsa will affect the end result. Italian plum-style or paste tomatoes will produce thicker salsas than slicing tomatoes. If you use slicing tomatoes, you can thicken your salsa by adding tomato paste or by draining off some of the liquid after you chop the tomatoes. Never add flour or cornstarch to salsa before canning because an unsafe product may result.

Peppers add color and heat to salsa recipes. Use high quality peppers, and do not increase the total amount of peppers in any recipe. However, you can substitute one type of pepper for another, or use canned chilies in place of fresh. Hot peppers are usually small and give a hot taste to salsa. The oils in hot peppers can cause burns, so it's a good idea to wear gloves when you cut or dice these peppers. And never touch your face, particularly near your eyes.

Mild peppers are usually larger than hot peppers. You can substitute a mild or bell pepper when the recipe calls for long green chilies. Typically, the skin of the long green chilies is removed by heating the peppers. But, if you are finely chopping the peppers, you do not need to remove the skin.

Do not attempt to can a recipe that has not been tested for safety, because food spoilage or a foodborne illness may result. If you are using an untested recipe or like to be creative by adding your own amount of ingredients, freeze the salsa and thaw in the refrigerator before serving.

Adding acid is necessary to safely preserve salsa. Follow recipe directions for adding vinegar or bottle lemon juice to home-canned salsa. Do not substitute vinegar for lemon juice unless this substitution is given in the recipe, or an unsafe product may result.

For more information on salsa, check out the University of Minnesota Extension Service Food Safety Web site at <http://www.extension.umn.edu/foodsafety> and click on "Food Preservation."

HANDLE FRESH-CUT PRODUCE SAFELY
By Deb Botzek-Linn, Food Science Educator
U of M Extension Service

Fresh fruits and vegetables are important to our health and well being. And as we eat more of them, we need to know how to handle them properly to help reduce the risk of foodborne illness. Although low, the proportion of foodborne illness associated with fresh fruits and vegetables has increased over the last several years.

Fresh-cut produce is the fastest growing sector of the fresh produce industry, according to the Food and Drug Administration. Salad mixes, peeled baby carrots, broccoli floret, cut celery stalks, shredded cabbage and cut melons are a few of the many examples of fresh-cut products now available in the produce department.

Peeling, slicing, coring, or trimming fruits and vegetables removes the peel or rind, which serves as the natural barrier to bacteria. You can reduce the risk of illness from fresh-cut produce by following these safe handling practices:

- Check that fresh cut fruits and vegetables like packaged salads and precut melons are refrigerated at the store before buying. Don't buy fresh cut items that aren't refrigerated.
- Check to be sure that the fresh fruits and vegetables you buy are not bruised or damaged.
- Rinse fresh fruits and vegetables under running tap water, including those with skins and rinds that are not eaten. However, packaged fruits and vegetables labeled "ready-to-eat," "washed" or "triple washed" don't need to be washed.
- Rub firm-skin fruits and vegetables under running tap water or scrub with a clean vegetable brush with running tap water.
- Never use detergent or bleach to wash fresh fruits or vegetables.
- Keep fresh fruits and vegetables separate from raw meat, poultry or seafood in your refrigerator.
- Throw away fresh fruits and vegetables that have not been refrigerated within two hours of cutting, peeling or cooking.
- Discard the product when the "use by" date has expired.
- Wash hands and clean all surfaces and utensils with hot water and soap, including cutting boards, counter tops, peelers, and knives that will touch fresh fruits or vegetables before and after food preparation.
