A growing problem... Salt Pollution

Minnesota has a growing salty water problem that threatens its freshwater fish and other aquatic life, chloride from both de-icing salt and water softeners gets into lakes, streams and groundwater that supply drinking water. It takes only one teaspoon of salt to permanently pollute five gallons of water. Once salt gets into water there is no easy or inexpensive way to remove it.

- White stains on dry surfaces are telltale signs of using too much salt.
- Shovel early and often to minimize ice buildup which may require the use of excess salt.
- Newly designed scrapers available at hardware outlets can remove ice efficiently and prevent the need for salt.

EVERYONE'S HELP IS NEEDED

Snow plow drivers already take specialized training to reduce salt distribution on public roadways, but help is also needed from business owners, property managers, custodians and private citizens to reduce the amount of salt used in water softeners, on sidewalks, driveways and parking lots.

WATER SOFTENERS REQUIRE SPECIAL ATTENTION

Salt discharged by water softeners is carried into waterways via sewage treatment facilities, which empty into lakes or rivers. Because these facilities cannot remove salt from the wastewater, it is important to minimize the amount of salt used in water softeners.

- Lake City's municipal water supply is rated at 17 grains. Adjust your softener to this setting if you have city water.
- If you have an older water softener adjust the timer for longer intervals between recharges.
- Consult a professional, if necessary, to adjust your softener for maximum efficiency.

EFFECTIVE WAYS TO REDUCE SALT USAGE

- A 12 oz. container such as a coffee mug full of salt is sufficient to de-ice a 20 foot driveway or 10 concrete sidewalk squares.
- Try to spread salt with approximately 3 inches between salt grains. Using a handheld spreader can help distribute salt evenly.
- Sweep up excess salt on dry pavement after ice has melted. This will prevent salt from washing into streams, lakes, wetlands, or groundwater.

Shoveling is hard on shoulders

If shoveling recent snow is affecting your shoulders, you're not alone. The twisting, throwing, pushing and jarring motions of shovel- ing can cause shoulder pain immediately or days later.

Where does your shoulder hurt? The location of your pain often helps indicate what's wrong. Pain on the outside of the upper arm commonly results from problems in the rotator cuff, a small group of muscles which stabilize the shoulder. When pain occurs in the front of the shoulder the bicep tendon or cartilage may be to blame. Pain on the back side of the shoulder may have a variety of causes, including referred pain from the neck or impingement of the rotator cuff. If you find yourself grabbing the top of your shoulder to soothe your pain, your issue could be more related to your neck than your shoulder, although both could be to blame.

Often, we assume that a shoulder injury would result in immediate pain. Unless your shoulder pain was caused by an obvious injury, such as a slip or fall, the pain often begins one or two days afterward. Even if you can't pinpoint what caused your shoulder pain, non-surgical treatment is often very helpful. Physical therapy is typically the first choice for treatment of shoulder pain and can help considerably. Hands-on treatment, such as soft tissue mobilization, myofascial release, and stretching can be very helpful in the early stages to reduce pain and regain the ability to reach into cupboards, turn the steering wheel or get your wallet out of your back pocket. Once the pain begins to decrease, gentle strengthening exercises help restore challenging movements like lifting a stack of plates from the cupboard, laundry or challenging work tasks. If shoulder injuries are more severe, physical therapists are trained to identify these situations and refer you to an orthopedic surgeon for further evaluation.

Mary Kleis and Joan Kopacz are the physical therapists at ActivePT, which serves seven communities in Southeastern Minnesota.

They enjoy serving the Lake City ActivePT location on Mondays and Wednesdays. Mary is a resident of Rochester, enjoys hiking, boating and waterskiing, and spending time with her family. Joan is a resident of Lake City, enjoys running, spending time with her family, and is an avid fisherman.
